Bridal Jewelry

There is an interesting background of bridal jewelry and other attire for brides to wear on their big day. The traditional rhyme of "something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue" has some historical hints dating back to 19th Century English folklore. Bridal jewelry is mainly for reasons of wedding rites, fertility, and luck, and it is expressed in the form of gold adornments.

Nowadays, wedding jewelry is usually focused on the rings that brides and grooms exchange during their vows. It is commonly believed that the first examples of wedding rings were found in ancient Egypt. Relics dating to 6,000 years ago, including papyrus scrolls, are evidence of the exchange of braided rings of hemp or reeds between spouses. Ancient Egypt considered the circle to be a symbol of eternity, and the ring served to signify the perpetual love of the spouses. This was also the origin of the custom of wearing the wedding ring on the ring finger of the left hand, because the ancient Egyptians believed that this finger enclosed a special vein that was connected directly to the heart, denominated in Latin the "Vena amoris".

The Western traditions of wedding rings can be traced to ancient Rome and Greece, and were first associated with the marital dowry and later with a promise of fidelity. The modern exchange of rings derived from the customs of Europe in the Middle Ages as part of Christendom. In the United States, wedding rings were initially only worn by wives, but became customary for both husbands and wives during the 20th century.

Wedding jewelry are not simply for the bride and the groom. Some brides bestow a gift to her bridesmaids to wear with their dresses. It can be in the form of bracelets, necklaces, earrings or charms. For those brides who select a style of religious adornment for their rings, they can choose matching cuffs, bangles or earrings to give their bridal party. It is a personal touch and keepsake worn by their bridesmaids and maid of honor.
